

[illegible]

5      A model for computer resources based on type and amount is employed in a consistent manner across several layers in a data processing system as a mechanism for providing users with significantly more control over the allocation, utilization and scheduling of resources for user's software applications running on the target computer system.

[illegible]